The candidates also sparred over the inequality of pay for women. MacArthur said that as the former owner of York, he created thousands of jobs and provided good salaries for women, and said his actions spoke louder than Belgard's words.

Belgard said salary equality was "an issue long overdue in this country." She said two-thirds of employees are women and they are "trying to put food on the table." Passing laws that guarantee equal pay, she said, would also help "reduce the shortfalls of Social Security."
