As of the date of the 2017, Phil Murphy led the discussion of small amounts of marijuana for recreational use by adults would be legalized "in the first 100 days" of his Administration.

While his former secretary, in his early days, there was a sense that with the Republican Christ-elect in office and the possibility of a united government under Democratic control, it was considerably better for weed users to kick back, relax and live without the fear of re-employment.

And here we are.

As of this week, the Governor's office by 15 days before the end of the count while the Assembly – both controlled by his party – reportedly intend to overrule the decision on the marijuana market.

This past November, some 60 percent of New Jersey voters approved Constitutional Amendment to fully legalize marijuana from sale but left it to the Legislature to work out the details.
