

Adults in New Jersey are split over whether marijuana should be made legal for recreational use, but one in four say they would try it or use it if it were legal, according to a recent Stockton University poll.

According to the poll of 728 adult New Jersey residents, 49 percent support legalizing marijuana for recreational use. Forty four percent oppose legalization, with 5 percent unsure.

Seventy five percent say they do not currently use marijuana and would not even if it were legal.

Gov. Phil Murphy supported legalizing marijuana for people ages 21 and older during his gubernatorial campaign as a social justice issue and as a way to raise an estimated $300 million in sales tax revenues.

Medical marijuana is currently legal in the state.
