Murphy has performed admirably in dealing with the Covid-19 crisis. He is comfortable in his leadership role and is acutely aware of his responsibility to offer reassurance to a nervous and fearful public.

The sympathy he and Persichilli express over the reported deaths is genuine and heartfelt. Their desire and willingness to put all their energies and resources into overcoming the pandemic and preventing additional deaths is evident in their voices.

Had they any choice, the three—Murphy, Persichilli and Callahan—would have preferred not to be in their current roles.

They were thrust into them by a crisis none could have predicted.

They've risen to the challenge; they've become the face of a government focused on what is government's highest responsibility—the safety and security of its people.
