Figure 10 is a 3D surface plot illustrating the relationship between the number of hidden units ( $n$ ), the learning rate ( $\eta$ ), and the error ( $E$ ). The vertical axis represents the error ( $E$ ) ranging from 0 to 1. The horizontal axis represents the number of hidden units ( $n$ ) ranging from 1 to 10. The depth axis represents the learning rate ( $\eta$ ) ranging from 0.001 to 0.1. The surface shows that the error ( $E$ ) generally decreases as the number of hidden units ( $n$ ) increases and the learning rate ( $\eta$ ) decreases.

the first time in the history of the world, the people of the United States have been called upon to decide whether they will submit to the law of force, and give up the God-given right of self-government.

Figure 10. A 2D density plot showing the distribution of the first two principal components of the 100 samples. The x-axis represents the first principal component (PC1) and the y-axis represents the second principal component (PC2). The color scale indicates the density of samples, ranging from blue (low density) to red (high density). The plot shows a clear separation between two distinct clusters, which correspond to the two different groups of samples.
