Please provide a narrative summary of your project.

Narrative justice is a powerful movement for transformative social change with the representation of the stories or voices of those who historically have been marginalized or considered “voiceless”. As stated as key values for Stockton University deliberative dialogue. This cohort of students will provide 2-4 deliberative dialogues on campus each semester connected to the guide they develop. Each scholar will bring unique training – for example, Alicia Bell focuses on media reparations – and the students will develop the deliberative dialogue guide in conjunction with the materials experienced during the Master class. Students will then advertise and deploy these materials on campus. The guides will continue to be a resource through CRIL for faculty members to utilize in their classes.

A masterclass is an experiential, applied learning opportunity provided to students of a particular discipline by an expert. Typically, masterclasses are utilized in the discussion of visual and performing arts, as well as music. Masterclasses are forums where skills are developed – specifically, applied learning that involves hands-on engagement with a concept or task. While it is not typical to consider faculty providers of masterclasses, the scholars who will be traveling to Stockton’s CRIL will be experts in very specific areas of media disinformation, misrepresentation, and digital literacy and diversification. I believe that Masterclass is the appropriate term.
