Assessment Plan

- x How will you know if your project is a success?
- x What are your anticipated outcomes and specific measurements for success?
- x What is your project's "finish line?"

This project through shared events and projects demonstrates how important it is to bring the voices of the members of the indigenous communities to the Stockton student body. This comprehensive program will support the connections already being established and will provide a jump-start for long-term curricular and institutional development.

To a degree, the success is already built-in as a collaborative partnership that had been developing for the last several years. This program is based on the previous proof-of-design successful exhibitions, symposia, workshops, and collaborations. The discussions with the indigenous communities in New Jersey and artists in the national US level had been already initiated. The partners' agreement to pursue such complicated schedule as well as scheduled parallels in programming are already a measure of success.

If approved, the success of this expanded program will be demonstrated through the attendance and participation as well as complexity of the student projects and ideas shared at the roundtables. Finally, the long-term curricular development that undoubtedly will emerge after the project conclusion will be considered a measure of success.

Outcomes

- x Exhibition series
- x Lecture series
